Starting today, a new feature is added to the Torrance Herald - The Health-O Gram - It is written and paid for by Dr. R. A. Larson, D.C., Ph.C.

Due to many inquiries and questions received in my office concerning the scope of Chiropractic and its relation to public health, I have decided, after considerable study, to try and answer some of the questions pertaining to Chiropractic and the methods used in my office.

It has never been my policy to advertise so-called "free-clinic" or other methods to lure patients to my office, and then sell them on a "course" or "monthly plan" of treatment. It has always been my contention that a doctor should always do his best each time a patient comes to his office, whether it takes one treatment or more. Therefore my patients are not asked to subscribe to advance payments for treatments.

How Does CHIROPRACTIC Differ from Other Methods?

THE QUESTION noted above is perhaps the most frequent question put to a Chiropractor. After over fifty years of successful experience, serving literally millions of sick persons, there are still many who do not understand what Chiropractic is, and how its seeming miracles are performed.

That, perhaps, is because there is no other system or method with which it may be compared. It differs from all other healing methods in three important respects:

FIRST: While other schools of healing look to the external world for the cause of disease, Chiropractic locates the fundamental cause within the body itself. External conditions - sudden changes of temperature, invasion of the body by germs, exposure to wet and cold - are generally considered as causes of disease. But the well-known fact that some persons do not become ill when subjected to these conditions compels the Chiropractor to believe that high body resistance is the safeguard of health and that lack of resistance is the fundamental cause of disease. A normal supply of nerve energy from the brain and spinal cord to every part of the body means a state of high resistance, which defends the body against the so-called, enemies from without. A deficient nerve supply means low resistance, which, in turn, renders the body a fertile field for disease. Nerve pressure at the spine blocks the flow of vital energy and as a result resistance goes down, thereby permitting disease to set in. It is a distinctive doctrine of Chiropractic that the essential cause of disease is within the body.

SECOND: While the work of other methods is to treat or remove the effects of disease, the function of Chiropractic is to remove the cause. Pain, for example, is an effect of disease. The procedure of most methods is to suppress the pain, whereas the work of Chiropractic is to correct the condition that causes the pain. The effort of Chiropractic is not to suppress symptoms or to remove the effect; its function is to free the nerves from the pressure that causes symptoms to appear.

And lastly, other methods are based on the belief that "cures" must be introduced from without, while Chiropractic maintains that cures come from within. Nature has endowed the body with the power to heal itself. All that it needs is a chance.
